

LUTHERAN SETTLEMENT HOUSE × THE M MOVEMENT

The House Phone.

A 125th-anniversary campaign, a multichannel funnel, and a media brand built around one object: a phonebooth that answers.

The Moment

Philadelphia's longest-standing settlement house turns 125. Founded in 1902 to bring every kind of person under one roof, LSH still answers four kinds of need — and the anniversary is the rare moment when heritage becomes reach.

1902

Founded in the Settlement House Movement — radical compassion as method

125

Years of continuous service in Fishtown, Kensington & Frankford

4

Words on the booth: Hungry. Hurt. Homeless. Hopeless.

The brief: convert a milestone into a movement — and a movement into recurring investment in LSH.

The Insight

Charity content asks. Movement content travels. The M Movement is a media brand LSH happens to own — the way Patagonia publishes and Yeti runs a film studio.

CHARITY CONTENT

- Speaks as an institution
- Reach capped by sympathy
- Asks before it gives
- Stock imagery, crisis tropes

MOVEMENT CONTENT

- Speaks as a belief — I am you
- Reach earned by feeling
- Gives stories before it asks
- One object, one icon: the booth

Separation is the strategy: M Movement earns the audience; LSH converts it.

THE IDEA

The House Phone

A working phonebooth, painted in LSH brand, on the corners LSH has served since 1902. A house phone belongs to everyone under the roof — no owner, no gatekeeper. You just pick it up.

Hungry. Hurt. Homeless.
Hopeless.
Pick up.

THE HOUSE PHONE

Why This Name Clears

Market scan of the crisis-line and installation landscape. The obvious territory is occupied — the whitespace is the word LSH already owns: House.

The Hope Booth

Existing nonprofit (Marietta, GA) — remodeled phonebooths delivering hope globally

All Hope × Booth constructions are off the table

Answer the Call

Taken twice — NY Police & Fire Widows' & Children's Fund (dba) + Chicago charity

Call-to-action namespace is crowded

Wind Phone

Japan's Telephone of the Wind owns the grief-booth space culturally

Avoid elegy; our booth is alive, it answers

The House Phone

Clear in nonprofit, campaign & installation scans · rhymes with Settlement House

Recommended — verify trademark before launch

The Movement

“I Am You” is the settlement house movement's founding idea — no separation between the server and the served. Every piece of creative is a pair, speaking the same sentence.

I was hungry.

I am you.

A pantry client × the donor who stocks it

I was eighteen and out of options.

I am you.

A shelter resident × a board member

I answered the phone.

I am you.

A counselor × a former caller, ten years on

Format-native to Reels: split-screen portraits, matched sentences, shared light.

THE FRANCHISES

The content engine · 5 formats

LSH posts about programs. The M Movement publishes about the feeling of being caught when you fall.

The Funnel

Every channel's job is ultimately one metric: grow the list, convert the line.

Channel Architecture

Instagram — flagship

The booth is photogenic and Philly is an Instagram city. Portraits, pairs, the object.

TikTok / Reels — story engine

Pick Up films and I Am You pairs, native vertical, built to travel.

YouTube — the long form

House Screen Originals, archive docs, the full Pick Up series.

LinkedIn — institutional track

Booth sponsorships, 125-year impact narrative for corporate & foundation officers.

Email — the spine

Primary conversion metric. Every channel feeds the list; the list feeds LSH.

Content Franchises

Recurring formats, not one-off posts — each one ownable, repeatable, and consent-gated.

Pick Up

Hero franchise. 60–90s films: one person, one of the four H's, one moment someone answered. Ends on the booth.

I Am You

The pairing format. Matched portraits, donor × client, same sentence, shared light.

The Line Is Open

Audio-first. Consented call moments and voicemails, repackaged as story + podcast feed.

125 Objects

Anniversary countdown. One artifact per post from 125 years — ledger, pantry list, brick.

The Friday Matinee

The screening series — the public face of The House Screen (next slide).

Every Pick Up and Line Is Open piece passes the consent flag before it enters the queue. No exceptions.

The House Screen

A streaming platform for hope — built in three honest tiers. Studio titles can't be self-hosted; curation, licensed screenings, and originals deliver the platform without the licensing exposure.

A — THE CANON

Launch now

Editorial curation layer: the hope-cinema canon (Erin Brockovich, The Pursuit of Happyness, Pride...) with original essays, linking out to legal streams. Zero licensing cost. Criterion-meets-Letterboxd authority.

B — THE MATINEE

Campaign launch

Licensed public screenings (Swank / Criterion Pictures, low hundreds per title). Monthly Friday Matinees at the senior center, partner venues, summer booth-side. Every seat is a list capture.

C — THE ORIGINALS

Year two

The archive becomes the programming: 125 years of LSH docs + the Pick Up films as House Screen Originals on YouTube — free distribution, fully owned. FAST-channel partnership if volume justifies.

Sequence: A immediately → B at launch → C after the anniversary. Name to clear trademark screening before the deck ships.

Four Phases to 125

- | | | | |
|---|----------------------|-------------------------|---|
| ● | THE WHISPER | Months 1–3 | Unbranded booths appear in Fishtown, Kensington, Frankford. Channels launch; the booths go unmentioned. Press discovers; we decline to confirm. |
| ● | THE CLAIM | Months 4–6 | Anniversary announced. 125 Objects countdown begins. The Canon publishes. Matinees start. Hold the Line membership opens at $19.02/mo. |
| ● | THE UNVEILING | The 125th · 2027 | The booth rings at the gala. The Pick Up series drops the same week, all channels. Press exclusive placed in advance. |
| ● | THE LONG LINE | Post-anniversary | Booths expand corner by corner. Originals begin. The campaign converts from moment to institution. |

THE UNVEILING

At the 125th, the booth rings.

A board member answers, in front of the room. That's the whole show. No sizzle reel, no auctioneer warm-up — one ring, one answer, one quiet room. The ask follows while the silence is still working.

Press exclusive placed in advance — PR lane. Pick Up series drops the same week.

The Investment Model

Tiered as telephony. Recurring revenue is the investment thesis for LSH — the campaign's job is monthly lines held open, not one-night totals.

$19.02 /month

HOLD THE LINE

The hero ask. The founding year as the number. Members get the inverse experience: voicemails from the House, seasonal recordings from staff and clients.

$125 once

THE ANNIVERSARY GIFT

The milestone ask, frictionless at the gala and on the QR flow. One number, one reason, one night.

Named major

SPONSOR A BOOTH

Major-donor and corporate tier. A brass line on the booth itself — a corner of the city with your name on the act of answering.

Measured on: email list growth, Hold the Line conversions, booth call volume & QR scans, Matinee attendance, earned media. Vanity metrics reported, never optimized.

Taste Above the Machine

This campaign runs on stories from people in genuinely vulnerable moments. The operating system protects them structurally, not aspirationally.

Consent is a blocking field

No story enters the publish queue without explicit, revocable sign-off. The flag is binary; “pending” is invisible to distribution.

One-touch human approval

Content arrives at the gate fully formatted per channel. The only question left for a human is taste: approve, hold, kill — with a 24-hour recall window.

Disclosure-first

Every cross-promotion and partner placement carries its disclosure before it can advance. The machine filters down; it never promotes up.

Operational engine beneath, editorial judgment above — logistics automated, the human gate untouched.

Pick up.
